ROCKY MOUNTAIN PLANTS

Having received many requests from patrons for a general collection of some of the more showy and conspicuous of the hardy perennial mountain flowers distributed by us, we have prepared and now offer a limited number of

COLLECTION "A."

Of twelve packets of seeds, containing a liberal quantity of the following species:

Aquilegia caerulea albiflora. A lovely pure glistening white form of the popular Rocky Mountain Columbine. The flowers are enormous and the spurs very long and slender. Seeds germinate readily and seedlings bloom the second year and soon make large clumps. A beautiful novelty.

Aster tortifolius. This is a lovely, large flowered aster from Southern Utah. The flowers greatly resemble Arctotis grandis, and grow singly on long, slender stems. A fine flower for cutting.

Cont'd.

Aconitum Columbianum. Mountain Monkshood. This is a tall-growing monkshood found in the high mountains of Utah. Its natural habitat is along the edges of the mountain streams, but it does very well in the hardy border, and is easily raised from seeds.

Balsamorhiza sagittata. Balsam root. This is a member of the composite order, having flowers somewhat resembling sunflowers, with a heavy balsamic scent. The leaves are soft and silky and shaped like an arrow-head. The plant makes a beautiful appearance in the garden. A species of sterling merit, and well worthy of attention at the hands of flower lovers.

Castilleja parviflora. The conspicuous and showy "Indian plume" of the mountain region of the West. Difficult to grow from the small seeds, but if you succeed in obtaining a few plants, you will be well repaid for your trouble.

Oenothera marginata. A low-growing evening primrose, bearing enormous sweetly scented flowers in profusion. The flowers are pure white when they open, but gradually turn to pink. If seeds are sown early the plants will bloom the first year.

Linum Lewisii. A pretty, hardy perennial blue flowered flax, with fine fern-like foliage.

Hedysarum Mackenzii. This species is now being offered by the leading seedmen. The pea-shaped flowers are rosy red in color and borne in great clusters. Easily grown from seeds.

Pentstemon cyananthus. Unquestionably the most beautiful of the Western Pentstemons. Flowers large, clear blue, in a compact spike. Seeds germinate freely, and plants bloom the second year. This plant in bloom in your garden will call for much admiration.

Pentstemon Palmeri. The Southern Utah "peach-blossom" Pentstemon, so called from the odor and color of its flowers. A magnificent species, but it needs slight protection until the plants are thoroughly established.

Pentstemon heterophyllus. The fall blooming Pentstemon. Purple flowers.

Thalictrum Fendleri. A showy foliage plant, doing well in the hardy border.

Our supply of seeds of some of the above species is rather limited, hence for late orders we reserve the right to substitute for any species not in stock some other species of equal merit, with the understanding that if the seeds, as received by you, are not satisfactory in all respects you may retain any one packet for your trouble and return the balance and your money will be returned to you without question.
